OTTAWA (CP)-A New Democratic Party group publicly unveiled a campaign today to move their party further to the political left and to build a "socialist base" among Canadians.

They distributed at a news conference a five-page, 2,000-word manifesto labelled For an independent Socialist Canada.

It contained several references to a threat of American control and the evils of capitalism.

Prof. Melville Watkins, one of several group spokesmen, said the immediate objective is to get their ideas accepted as New Democratic Party policy at the party's Winnipeg convention in October.

But beyond that, the group wants to "radicalize" the party and society generally, he added. Prof. Watkins, University of Toronto economist, was the author of a 1968 report to Lester B. Pearson's Liberal administration on foreign ownership of Canadian industry.

Those appearing with him at he news conference included Giles Endicott, research director, Canadian Food and Allied Workers Union; James Laxer, Que en 's University graduate student; and John Smart, president of the Kingston NDP riding association.

They distributed a list of 95 names of persons identified as signers of the new left mani-festo. None of the party's 22 MPs was listed.

MADE MANY SUGGESTIONS Among statements in the document distributed:

-The major issue today is national survival, not national unity, and the fundamental threat is external, not internal. -Canada has become a resource base and consumer market within the "American empire. -This "empire" is characterized by "militarism abroad and racism at home."

-Canada should stop backing the "barbarous war" in Vietnam through sale of arms and strategic materials to the U.S.

The mosquito egg can lay dormant for a long time in dry seil. When a region gets a rainy season after years of drought, the mosquito will make a comeback. There were mosquitoes biting people in parts of southern Arizona last month where mosquitoes are almost unbeard of. They were lying in the dry soil for years, just waiting for heavy rain.

BROTHERS BACKS

Education Minister Donald Brothers said today his department has no plans to eliminate Bible readings in the schools.

He was asked to comment on the question in the wake of recent criticism of the readings by Roman Catholic Bishop Remi De Roo of Victoria and other church officials.

Brothers said the only letter he has received requesting an end to the readings in recent months has been from the Vancouver School Board.

At the same time there have been "hundreds of letters" in favor of Bible readings, he said.

of newspaper readers—who knew little more than that about him. The political leader of North Vietnam had ensured political stability, however, through his wisdom in arranging long ago for other, younger men to take over the direction of the country under his guidance. Thus he became, while still retaining a hand in North Vietnamese affairs, a respected elder almost completely untouched by the criticisms or setbacks of the regime which he had estab-

With this post-mortem momentum, it appears that there will be little change in North Vietnamese policy for some time. Thus the scissor strategy of conducting the Paris peace talks in close conjunction with battlefield operations in South Vietnam will no doubt be continued. The war, which might be described as in a state of active stalemate, has brought few successes to the Viet Cong and Northern forces in recent times, but the presence of the Northern divisions is still very evident. Nothing has been yielded, little has been lost, and little conceded.

What could be the hint of a major concession, however, may be seen in the Paris statement of the chief of the North Vietnamese delegation that a major and rapid withdrawal of United States troops from South Vietnam could result in a new approach to the negotiations. While this appears to be a demand for a new American concession, it indicates in reality a significant backward step from Hanoi's previous in-

THE NAME OF HO CHI MINH sistence on a total withdrawal of had become familiar to millions American forces before meaningful discussion could take place. The figure of 100,000 was suggested to the Hanoi spokesman, and he apparently accepted this as the magnitude of withdrawal he had in mind.

> Such a move, however, would run counter to President Nixon's current stall on further reductions of overseas strength. With some 25,000 troops already sent home from the war, he has looked for a corresponding retrenchment of North Vietnamese activity. So far, this has been hard to define, but the latest Paris statement may perhaps be interpreted as a form of reply.

It is not likely that the Paris remark comes as a consequence of Ho Chi Minh's death Such a basic policy - if indeed it is one - no doubt was formulated long ago and would have been part of the deceased leader's strategy. It is inevitable, however, that as time goes on, the machinery that he has left in Hanoi will show the effects of new forces. Already there is speculation as to whether the hawkish or dovish elements of the North Vietnamese government will gain control, and the struggle between these-if much of it becomes evident to foreign observation-may show Ho Chi Minh to have pursued a moderate course in his conduct of affairs.

It is clear, in any case, that the Communist world has lost one of its major figures—a leader of ability and determination who as boy and man was active in the affairs of his country for 70 years.

Blast Into Uncertainty

THE WILDERNESS SOCIETY of North America has added its voice to the mounting chorus of protest against a proposed underground nuclear testing program in the Aleutian Islands this fall. Meeting in Parksville—the first time in Canada since its founding in 1936the group represented ecologists, forestry and wildlife experts, and conservationists. They warned that the explosions could have disastrous effects on plants and wildlife in the surrounding area.

In recent years it has been necessary to bypass in a boat the difficult 14 miles of terrain between Gordon River and Logan Creek. Now, as the result of clearing by a four-man Parks Branch crew during the summer, it is possible to follow the original telegraph line route.

The first hikers to complete the entire 60-mile walk since the project was finished report that the rest of the journey along the shoreline from Logan Creek to Pachena Point is very difficult in some spots. To make it easier-but still a challenge -for a greater number of hikers more work needs to be done in brushing out sections of overgrown trail where beach travel is blocked Parks Branch should be encouraged investment in the future.

Few areas of the world can offer the hiker more attractions than the west coast of Vancouver Island. It is an area at once rugged and peaceful, with plenty of room for many more people to enjoy it without the sense of crowding present in other more accessible spots.

When the federal government takes over this strip of coastline for a national park as it intends in the next few years there will undoubtedly be a stepped-up program. A NEED FOR REFORM

Problem: After a 'Guilty' Verdict Comes the Sentencing

FEW aspects of the administration of way, particularly in standardizing remisjustice in Canada are more arbitrary, potentially unfair and actually unjust than the sentencing of convicted persons.

Society has been much concerned to see that no one is c onvicted improperly: ironically, considering that most people are guilty and what really counts is the sentence to be handed down, there has not been the same concern about disparities in punish-

Thus, imprisonment for an indefinite term is possible and prevalent in Ontario and British Columbia, but not in other provinces. The provisions concerning remission time are such that a sentence of two years will get you out in 16 months and 12 days while one of two years less a day will keep you in for 20 months and 16 days. The application of the "habitual criminal" law is so lacking in uniformity that Vancouver accounts for almost half of all convictions.

Even within single jurisdictions, disparities can be notorious. Lawyers strive mightily to get on before certain judges known to take a lenient view of certain offences. Some judges will give time to pay a fine; others will not. Some date a prison term from the time the offender is first taken into custody; others do not. Everywhere there is a perhaps understandable but quite improper tendency to go easier on those who "cop a plea" and save the state the expense of a trial, a modus vivendi which is obviously open to all sorts of coercion.

The recent amendments to the Criminal Code have gone some small sion time, to correcting this situation but comprehensive reform, it appears, must await the long-term overhaul of the Criminal Code now promised by Justice Minister John Turner through the mechanism of a national Law Reform

This is not only an unfortunate but a curious decision since Mr. Turner has recently got the best thinking he is ever likely to get on the philosophy and practices of sentencing from the Foundation of Legal Research, an organization sponsored by the Canadian Bar Association, in the form of a report by W. B. Common, former Deputy Attorney General of Ontario, and Alan W. Mewett. professor of law at the University of the Foundation does not, apparently, believe in mass publicity, the report is being read by Chief Attorneys-General and judges Justices, Canada and it seems likely, having regard to the stature of its authors, to create a receptiveness for reform in legal circles which Mr. Turner might well exploit.

Note of Despair

Some of what Messrs. Common and Mewett have to recommend is tragically old hat. There is almost a note of despair in their plea that the indeterminate sentence be abolished, as the Archambault and Fauteux reports recommended long ago. They point out again "the startling variations" in institutional facilities for convicted persons across Canada and plead for "at least a start" on recasting The Prisons and Reformatories Act, that monstrous riddle, which is federal legislation but changed only at the request of individual provinces.

But the central theme of the Common-Mewett study is radically new if disarmingly simple. They point out that disparities in punishment exist because there is no philosophy of punishment in Canadian law and this is so because the system contains built-in provisions which have prevented such a philosophy from

The Criminal Code contains no statement of sentencing principles and since the Supreme Court of Canada does not have jurisdiction to hear appeals against sentence, nation-wide dicta have been lacking. For some reason, the majority of appeals to the provincial Courts of Appeal on questions of sentence do not raise issues that are considered to merit written judgments, so there has been little guidance from these sources either.

Accepted Principles

In trying to fill this gap, Messrs. Common and Mewett eschew hard and fast rules in favor of commonly accepted principles which all sentencing tribunals can follow. The punishment, they argue, must not only fit the crime but the offender and the community as well; uniformity of sentence for like offences is therefore neither possible nor desirable.

Their basic complaint is that we are too jail-happy in Canada. "Too lavish use is made in this country of imprisonment," they write. "A sentencing tribunal should start from the proposition that imprisonment should not be imposed unless that punishment can be affirmatively justified. This should entail enumerating and discarding all possible

The Loyal Orange Association may hold its opinion that there is no place for subsidized private school in a moeratic Canada. That is its privilege. However, to think that it has a monopoly on the right conception of education in a democracy is more than I can digest.

Does not Article 26 of the Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations accept as a basic democratic principle: "Everyone has the right to education; that education shall be free; that parents have the prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given their children."?

The problems in the world "which stem from segregation in schools" seem mainly to happen where there is no subsidizing of the private schools! It is the opinion of this association's secretary that religion can be kept out of education. Could it occur to him that in a democratic society there may be people who believe that there is no such thing as "education without religion"?

It is about time Canada should join most of the other democratic countries in the world where for decades there has been subsidy of private schools. Wolters, President District 12 (B.C.), National Union of Christian Schools, 1139 Burdett Ave., Victoria, B.C.

The courts must therefore be informed not only about the offence (this does not always happen when there is a guilty plea) but about the offender, Ideally, there should be a pre-sentence report for every offender and certainly for all apparent first offenders, for all those under 21 charged with indictable offence, and for all those where there is a possibility of a penitentiary term. Thus armed, the courts should then be empowered to:

• "Discharge" an offender, either absolutely or conditionally, in order to give him a second chance. The discharge, which differs from probation in that no conviction is registered, has proven useful in Britain, according to the study, since its introduction there in

ooking or a Foreign Policy Among

UNITED States foreign policy under President Nixon was described not long ago as equivalent to a ticket on the Titanic. The remark merits more than usual attention, since it came from a freshman Republican senator, William Saxbe, of Ohio, who rode into office last November as a Nixon R e publican against strong liberal Democratic opposition. What Sen. Saxbe was really saying was that U.S. foreign policy had been dangerous for some time, and remained so after Mr. Nixon's first few months in office. It was not, except for its source and vivid form of expression, an unusual observation. For years, critics have contended that the U.S. really has no foreign policy beyond one or two dogmas defining the "free" and "Communist" worlds and their respective roles (usually in terms of U.S. interests).

Notoriously Inept

Foreign policy is essentially not so much a policy as the mode of operation of the bureaucracy that administers it. Since few bureaucracies are as overblown or as set in their ways as that of the state department, this line of criticism continues, the U.S. foreign policy establishment is notoriously inept at maintaining awareness of new trends, preparing for events outside predictable patterns, or handling emergencies except by a gut reaction in which the narrowest, shortest-term apparent U.S. interests predominate.

President Kennedy, soon after he took office, was shocked by his first discovery of the non-existence of U.S. foreign policy. Perturbed by what he had heard of the doings of left-wing leader Cheddi Jagan in what was then British Guiana, be asked the state department for a paper on U.S. policy toward that country - and he wanted it that afternoon, The department was aghast. Such a document would have to be prepared and then reviewed by so many people in so many different offices, he was told, that it would take weeks to produce. More seriously, President Kennedy allowed himself to be deluded into approving the Bay of Pigs adventure, recommended by a bureaucracy so far up in the clouds that it had convinced itself the Cuban people would rise against Fidel Castro at the first feeble sign of an invasion, even a Yankee-led save threatened U.S. citizens - petered out quickly when the troops stayed.

President Johnson similarly found the bureaucracy unprepared to contend with Latin American insurgency.

The initial excuse of sending U.S.

The Vietnam war is the worst example of faulty foreign policy advice in recent years. Rightness or wrongness of the principle behind U.S. intervention aside, President Johnson was wrongly convinced by his advisers that he could win an acceptably easy and early victory in a war despite three basic factors against the U.S.: 1. It was largely a guerrilla war. 2. It was at least in part a civil war. 3. Only the U.S.-supported side required direct foreign military support to-maintain its own viability. (Critics of the war cite this as the "lost cause" factor.)

believe. This was what President Nixon inherited, and it is hardly surprising, distressing as it may be to Sen. Saxbe, that he did not overnight change the bureaucracy from one which reacts to events to one which prepares for them. But he is trying. He considers himself best prepared for the handling of foreign policy as president, and devotes as much time as possible to it. He relies for advice mostly on his personal White House team, a band of experts under the foreign policy professional, Dr. Henry Kissinger, rather than on the state department under the affable amateur he put in charge, Secretary William

Rogers.

Mr. Nixon has himself indulged in some show-window foreign policy making, notably on his Asian tour of month ago. His silence on foreign matters since that tour suggests that he like his predecessors, has learned, something new since taking office. In his case, it is that foreign policy is not easily enunciated clearly and concis

Then there is a point raised in private by foreign policy specialists: that thereare dangers in a too clearly stated position on foreign policy. It might appear to set limits around which as adversary might feel he will be able to make an end run. A reported unfortunal remark of Dean Acheson's is cited which could have led the Chines believe they could intervene in the Korean war with impunity.

Ambiguity may indeed have a place in foreign policy. After more than seven months of Richard Nixon, especially after the Asian tour, it is in any event still very much present. The question one of its reasonable limits.

One thing which Premier W. A. C. Bennett's sweeping victory in the British Columbia election clarifies is that the words "political pundit" urchins, cucumbers and their - which are veritable walking pin cushions. Smooth skinned members, such as some sea cucumbers may actually have loose spiny plates imbedded in their flesh suggesting that they too, were prickly at one * * * > Another outstanding feature of this unusual group is the radial body plan shared by all members. Instead of being laid out with a front and a rear end as are most conventional animals the Echinoderms are designed like a wheel with body parts displayed around a central point like spokes.

The starfishes show this arrangement in its simplest form usually with five rays or arms radiating outward from a centrally located mouth.

The same plan is obvious in the serpent stars and in the sea lilies, the latter differing mainly in that, the body

position with the mouth

uppermost. The radial body plan is not quite so evident in a sea urchin partly because the covering of spines obscures the basic pattern. However a close look at the mouth-parts shows five teeth and related. parts arranged in a radiating pattern and when the spines and skin are removed the spoke-like arrangement of the plates forming the shell is revealed.

In fact a sea urchin looks very much like a starfish in which the five arms are bent upward in a graceful curve and united along their edges to form a hollow structure. The interlocking plates which appear in radiating rows in multiples of five are the counterparts of the plates on the lower surface of the starfish arms.

Even though radial symmetry appears to be basic to group there is evidence which suggests that Echinoderms are descended from animals tional type of body plan. For example in all cases the larvae are bilaterally symfront and back end, a left and right side as do most animals.

However, when they change over to the adult form the body parts take on the radial characteristic of the group. It would appear therefore that radiating symmetry was not the original body plan in the Echinoderms as it is in the jellyfishes and their relatives. These two major groups therefore are not even remotely related even though there is superficial resemblance in their body plan.

Still another most unusual feature distinguishes this "oddball" group of creatures. This is the possession of a series of tubes which carries sea water to all parts of the body and in most subgroups the system ends in remarkable structures called "tube feet" which are used in locomotion.

By controlling the pressure within various parts of the tube system the animal causes the tube feet to extend or contract, which, combined with suckers on the ends of the feet, make it possible for the animal to move over the

The tube feet also serve as anchors capable of holding the animal firmly to the rock even when pounded by surf. In starfishes these structures have the additional function of forcing the shells of bivalves apart during feeding process. The Echinoderms are neither small nor large, the smallest member being about one-half inch in diameter and the largest starfish about 32 inches. One sea cucumber can stretch to six feet in length but in this state the body is only two inches in diameter.

Pike Search Called Off

JERUSALEM (AP)-The Israeli army abandoned its search for Dr. James Pike tonight. Arab Kings Were Out When Nasser Cut Deck in Royal Oak cemetery.

By ELIAS ANTAR

BEIRUT (AP) — "In the end there will be only six kings left," the late King Farouk of Egypt was fond of saying.

"The king of spades, the king of diamonds, the king of hearts, the king of clubs, the king of England and myself," he would add with one of his booming laughs.

But the fun-loving Farouk was the first Arab monarch to be dverthrown after the Second World War, by an obscure colonel called Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Nasser showed it could be done, and he was emulated by army officers in Iraq, Yemen and, last Monday, in Libya.

Six other Arab countries were born as republics when colonial rule ended and they

King Faisal of Iraq and his uncle were murdered in the royal palace grounds in Baghdad in an army revolt in July,

The Yemen revolution of 1962—also led by a little-known colonel—differed slightly from the pattern. Imam Mohammed El Badr was overthrown, but escaped to lead his fighting tribesmen against the republic in an attempt to regain his throne. The Socialist army officers who staged the coup while Idris was in Turkey, also led by an obscure colonel moved swiftly during the night and proclaimed a republic, and the crown prince soon relin-

The buckets

There's no seat more comfortable than a cunningly contoured bucket . . . so Epic's got two of them (rear semi-buckets as well in SL models). Specially designed deep-cushioning will keep you comfortably in place no matter how vigorously you put Epic through its paces. CHICAGO (AP) - Corn futures declined nearly one cent on the Board of Trade today but attracted enough of late buying that turned up short covering to close on a near-steady tone.

Oats futures benefited from the strength in corn, both being feed grains, but other grains and soybeans were irregular. Trade between the very active opening and closing was at best range fashion lacking any apparent incentive for a strong move in either direction. Reports of possible expansion in export business helped firm corn prices. Open High 128% 129% 132% 134 137 13714 Low 128% 1331% 13614 107½ 108¼ 113¼ 113¼ 117% 107½ 113 117% 12214 11714 12514 121% 116% 124%

This is it! Our tiny punch card. Actual size. It can soak up 20 percent more information than one three times its size.

With System/3, you'll use a new punch card that's one-third the size of the regular card.

And for good reason.

It's easier to handle. Easier to store. And easier to process through your machine.

Instead of 80 columns, it has 96 columns.

Which means it can actually absorb 20 percent more information than the 80-column card you're used to seeing.

Cutting it down to size.

There's one thing you'll notice immediately about System/3.
Its size.

System/3 is small. In fact, it's a lot smaller than any business computer we've ever made.

If you have a 350-squarefoot room, you have room enough for System/3.

We've been able to cut it down to size because we've been able to use improved circuit families and the small card which lets you do more computing in less space.

But although it's small in size, System/3 is big in memory. You can have as much as 32,768 bytes of core storage.

More with less.

With System/3, you don't have to have a lot of machines handling your cards. Because our multi-function card unit can do as many as six different jobs.

It can read up to 500 cards a minute.

And it can also be used to punch, sort, print, collate and reproduce your cards.

For off-line work there are two new separate units you can use with System/3. A card sorter. And a data recorder for card punching and verifying.

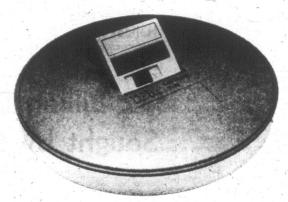

Your choice: disk or card.

System/3 isn't just one computer.

It's your choice.

If you've got a small business you might already be using some business machines. So for you the card system is worth considering.

If you have a lot of records to store, you might want to choose the disk system.

Our long-playing disks. Each one can give you direct access to 2.45 million bytes of data. As your business gets bigger, just add more disks. Up to four in all.

It gives you direct access to your files.

Which means you can update your inventory or billing records in minutes.

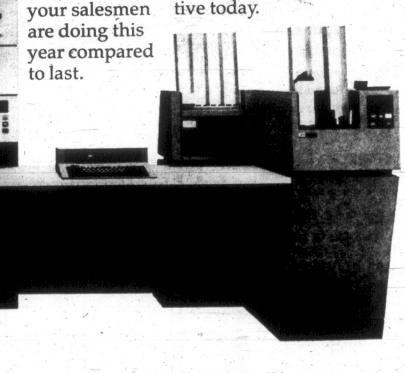

If you run a big business, you might find it economical to put System/3 in every one of your factories. Or in every warehouse.

It'll manage the paperwork.

No matter what system you use, System/3 can make running your business a lot easier.

You can keep tabs on whatever you have (or don't have) in stock. And reorder only what needs reordering.

You can spot a project in trouble. Track vendor shipments. And discover how

Bonsall said the company had promised to send a dredge to clear the channel leading to the sea but had only sent in a small from Chemainus Towing

The company said tests are under way to determine whether the silt from the plant had raised the level of the tidal

"We are taking aerial photo graphs and comparing old soundings to see if there been a gradual buildup of silt over the years."

Bonsall said the company sent five or six workmen down to shovel the silt aside to open a channel to the sea but "they floundered around up to their waists and couldn't do any thing.

Cannon said about $5,000 a ear would be asked from the ratepayers.

The ultimate, of course, is for all member sports to stage a combined national championship in conjunction with the Canada Games. This would be the true Canada Games. But where would the member sports then be without their own private championships each year, events of stature that are so jealously guarded at present?

It would be much more meaningful, even if some of the lesser athletes got clobbered as a result.

Key Figure In Red Drive Is Now Lost

By MURREY MARDER WASHINGTON (WP) -

American officials consider the death of Ho Chi Minh to be an important loss of the key unifying figure on the Communist side of the Vietnamese war, but experts were divided Wednesday about the consequences.

Specialists here acknowledged they can do no more than specualte about the impact of Ho's departure upon the prospects for peace.

The quickest general reaction was the widespread assessment that the North Vietnamese president's death leaves Hanoi's basic objectives in the war unchanged, with his successors bound to pursue the same goals.

But that judgment reveals little, it was readily condeded. The real question is what effect Ho's death will have on Communist tactics and strategy in pursuit of that

Some U.S. officials are now encouraged to believe, i.1 retrospect, that the summerlong stalement in diplomacy in Paris may have been due in part to immodibity in Hanoi as Ho neared his death.

If that has been the case, these officials suggest, North Vietnam now might be readier for more decisive and more "realistic" diplomatic exhanges that reflect the exhanges that reflect the military balance in the war. instead of pursuing what a m c u n t s to unconditional Communist demands for a U.S. "surrender."

STRATEY 'FROZEN'

Other specialists, on the contrary, think it more likely that North Vietnam and its Viet Cong partners in the South are deliberately frozen into exactly the strategy they will continue, irrespective of Ho's death.

This strategy, these experts believe, will continue to seek to exert maximum public pressure on President Nixon, conceding virtually nothing, to force precipitate U.S. tro-p withdrawals.

In trying to reconstruct the sequence of developments on Communist side, many U.S. analysts Wednesday connected the sudden departure from Paris on July 9 of Le Duc Tho with Ho's period of fatal illness.

Tho has been Hanoi's on-scene strategist in Vietnam peace talks.
Tho left Paris, the negotiations have been in a immobility. One immediate question is whether Tho will soon return to Paris with any shift of

A wide-open guessing game was going on behind the official scenes here about who might replace Ho, and when. prevailing view appeared to be that a collegium of leaders in Hanoi, who have been conducting North vietnam's day-to-day affairs, is likely to continue doing so, but that at some stage an internal power struggle for personal control is likely, or inevitable.

SYMBOL OF COHESION

But even while Ho is believed to have been increasingly compelled in recent years to delegate operational control of his government, he remained, as several experts put it, "the cement" or "the unifier" or "final arbiter" in Hanoi, the symbol of cohesion.

Without extraordinary charisma of the revolutionary Ho, who was converted into a near-saintly image across Vietnam, several experts noted, the solicitation of guerrillas to fight for the Communist cause in the name of "Uncle Ho" is automatically impaired.

The question here is whether this loss can be recouped by appeals to rally in Ho's memory.

Officials thought it might be only a coincidence that the first news of Ho's fatal illness came only a few hours after North Vietnam's chief negoin Paris, Xuan Thuy, made some newly ambiguous comments about U.S. troop. withdrawals. But once again, officials could not be certain

Thuy told newsmen in Paris Tuesday night, when they pressed him about Hanoi's reaction if President Nixon should order 100,000 American troops withdrawn from South Vietnam:

"If President Nixon continues to withdraw troops rapidly and in considerable numbers we will examine this and take it into account.

It was quoting a message of condolence sent by the central committee of the Chinese Communist party to the cen-tral committee of the Vietnamese Communist party.

Difficult to Hate a Half-Starved Santa Co

By STANLEY KARNOW The Washington Post

No major activist in this turbulent century of nationalist revolution spanned a longer period, covered a broader area of the world, engaged in a assortment of tactics, challenged such overwhelming odds and appeared to suffer greater frustrations in his struggles than Ho Chi Minh, the Vietnamese Communist leader.

This fragile figure, with his burning eyes and wispy beard, lived several lifetimes. Cabin boy, dishwasher, pastry cook, school teacher and photo retoucher in his youth, he went on to become a tireless organizer and conspirator, exceeding in his experiences both his older and younger contem-

Ho was already a well-known agitator when Mao Tse-tung was only an obscure librarian in Peking. He survived Stalin by more than a decade, outlived Gandhi and Nehru, and was still fighting to unity and dominate his shattered, divided country long after U Nu, Sukarno, Ben Gurion and other nationalists of their age had passed on their legacies to newer

Founder of the Indo-Chinese Communist Party, which dissolved into the Vietnminh and afterwards emerged as the Lao Dong (workers) movement, Ho had been a French, Soviet and probably Chinese Communist party member as

In his role as an international organizer, he wore a variety of disguises, from the saffron robes of a Buddhist monk to the quilted uniform of the Red Chinese 8th route

His list of aliases was endless: It was not until 1946, when he began his guerrilla war against France, that he started to use the nom-de-guerre Ho Chi Minh, meaning "he who

As a revolutionary, Ho spent years fleeing from colonial police and Chinese warlords, languishing in jails, hiding in remote mountain caves, plotting to liquidate rival compatriots, and even dying in newspaper reports, only to reappear under another name.

Like the ubiquitous bamboo tree of the Orient, he was far more resilient and stronger than he looked.

Indeed, for all his adventures and hardships, Ho managed to retain an image, partly real and partly contrived. of frailty, goodness and humility.

dressed in frayed clothes and sandals cut from tires, eschewed the comforts presidential palace to live in a garden hut, and often spoke in simple, sometimes sentimental terms devoid of Marxist-Leninist jargon.

Even in official propaganda, he was known as Cu or Bac Ho, the venerated Uncle Ho.

In contrast to Stalin's neo-Czarism or Mao's imperial posturing, Ho tried to project a portrait of himself that found a response among Vietnamese.

It was, in many ways, an appeal to filial piety, an attempt to instil in his people the feeling that, with him as patriarch, they constituted a national family.

Therefore, while, he was every inch a Communist, Ho's communism was less a utopian ideology, and end in itself, than an instrument of nationalism.

That feature, combined with Ho's own appearance, posed problem as the United States strove to make the namese war credible. As the late Bernard Fall, historian of the Vietnam war, has suggested, public opinion could be rallied against Hitler, Mussolini, Tojo, Stalin and Mao, "but with Ho Chi Minh, we enter the era of the hate gap."

And Fall quoted an American official in Saigon as saying: "You know, it's damned difficult to tell people to hate a guy who looks like a half-starved Santa Claus."

As a schoolboy, Ho was running errands for the anti-French resistance groups. For this, the story goes, he was expelled from school, enrolled at Lycee in the nearby province capital of Vinh, expelled again, and again enrolled at the Quoc-hoc College in Hue, an experimental school in which Vietnamese and French were taught.

Ho spent four years in the central Vietnam city of Hue, but left without a diploma. He taught briefly at a school in the fishing town of Phan-thiet, then made his way south to Saigon, there to seek a berth aboard a French ship. It was late 1911, and Ho, then bearing the alias Ba, was 21 years old.

He secured a messboy's job aboard the French liner Latouche-Treville, travelling between Vietnam and Marseilles. He later worked on other ships, visiting New York and Boston, and according to his biographers, these voyages are

Some experts, like Bernard Fall, have considered it significant that he essentially opted for the West against the East instead of turning for guidance and inspiration to China or Japan, as did more conservative Atlan nationalists.

About the same time, a group of young Chinese, including Chou En-lai and Chen Yi, also sought schooling in western

Leaving his maritime job a few months before the First orld War Ho settled in London working first as a hwasher and afterwards rising to the position of pastry

In London Ho continued his political education. There is some evidence he joined a clandestine Vietnamese organization called the "Lao Dong Hol Ngai" (Overseas Workers). In 1917, he moved to France.

If Europeans saw the First World War as a struggle between nations, Asians saw it as a European civil war denoting the decline of Western power. Within this context, however, Ho made the mistake of believing that Wilsonian self-determination was meant to include colonial areas

He suffered his first shock in 1919, at the Versailles peace conference, when his modest eight-point petition for Vietnamese autonomy, failed even to receive actice.

The alternative was armed revolt, and that issue arose at the 18th National Congress of the French Socialist Party, held in December, 1920. Ho participated as "Comrade Indochinese Delegate," and listened to the factions argue the question of peaceful versus violent revolution.

The advocates of violent revolution finally broke away to form the French Communist Party. Ho followed them, charter member of the new party and an activist in the 3rd

Ho disappeared in the 1930s and either from ignorance or erfuge, Communist newspapers published obituary. In Moscow, Vietnamese students even honored him at a memorial service. As late as 1945, French officials in Paris refused to believe intelligence reports from Vietnam that Ho had slipped back into the colony. that he had died in Hong Kong between 1931 and 1935.

After four years in the Soviet Union, from 1934 through 1938, Ho was in China. The Chinese communists and nationalists had agreed to fight together against the Japanese invaders. Accordingly, Ho was assigned as a political commissar in a Chinese nationalist unit.

He was more interested, of course, in planning a revolution for Vietnam. At his side in 1940 were Pham Van Dong, his most trusted aide, and Vo Nguyen Giap, a former teacher later to become the Vietnminh's senior

The fall of France to Hitler's armies and the Japanese thrust into Indochina gave Ho and his associates opportunity to set in motion their plans to build a nationalist resistance inside their country. In February, 1941, after 30 years outside Vietnam, Ho went back for the first time.

Through that winter his followers had established a "liberated zone" in the region of Cao Bang, inside Victnam near the China frontier. Here Ho tound a deep cave and made it his headquarters. The cave was situated in a mou Marx; he called a nearby stream Lenin River.

In mid-May, 1941, Ho organized a meeting of his central committee around a bamboo table in the cave. He reasoned that the French would be defeated by the Japanese, who in turn would be defeated by the allies. The Vietnamese Communists could eventually fill the consequent political vacuum, but on two conditions. They needed mass support as well as the co-operation of Chiang Kai-shek's Chinese naitonalists, the only plausible force in nearby China. To fulfil these conditions, Ho explained, their movement could not be overtly Communist. Thus he proposed the formation of a "front" to include peasants, workers and even "patriotic" landowners. The new league was called Vietnam Doc Lap Dong Minh, contracted to Vietminh, and it was born on May 19, 1941, Ho's 50th birthday.

On that date, too, Ho dropped the pseudonym Nguyen Ai Quoc and first used "Ho Chi Minh."

Wearing shorts and a pith helmet, carrying a cane, Ho entered Hanoi late in August, and on Sept. 2, 1945, declared Vietnam's independence in a speech that opened with the line from the American Declaration of Independence that "all men are created equal."

Though he had proclaimed independence, Ho now had to make it stick. To do so, he had to come to terms with France and urgently. North Vietnam at the time was occupied by looting Chinese nationalist troops. Saigon was temporarily in British hands. A French expeditionary force under Gen Jacques Leclerc was en route to the area. And Ho himself under pressure from diverse factions inside his own - some pushing for immediate freedom, others movement favoring deals with the Chinese nationalists.

the end of 1964, war was inevitable, and Ho told a French visitor: "You can kill 10 or our men for every one we kill of yours, but still we will outlast and defeat you in the

Moscow was anxious for peace for two main reasons: U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles had just unveiled his "massive retaliation" doctrine that might have menaced the Soviet Union if the Vietnam war continued. Moreover, the Russians were tempted to negotiate an end to the war in exchange for a French veto of the European defence

As a result, Ho was enjoined to accept a partitioned Vietnam, with a promise of elections in 1956 that would lead to reunification. But in 1956, Moscow did little to adance Hanoi's cause. On the contrary, the Russian proposal in 1957 that both North and South Vietnam be admitted to the United Nations tacitly signified that Moscow recognized a permanent division of the country.

Disappointed though he must have been, Ho appeared to accept the partition, and concentrated on consolidating the

As its policies changed, Hanoi seemed to swing between reliance on Peking and Moscow: With U.S. air attacks on North Vietnam after 1965, Ho was able to count on both Red China and the Soviet Union for massive aid, yet maintained an independent posture in the dispute between the two Communist powers.

Shuswap Diversion Report Soon

VANCOUVER (CP)-A detailed report on possible effects on the Thompson and Fraser river fisheries of British Columbia's proposed Shuswap diversion is expected to be ready soon, Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis said Wednesday.

Mr. Davis said the report will not be made public until it is studied by other federal departments and Ray Williston, B.C.'s Resources Minister

There have been objections from residents in the Kamloops-Salmon Arm area to the diversion which would carry water the Shuswap-Thompson watershed into the Okanagan.

Represented mainly by the Shuswap-Thompson River Research and Development Association, the objectors say they are not against the diversion as long as it is proved the future water needs of the Shuswap-Thompson area will be met.

They also ask for comprehensive studies of the area's water needs before any diversion oc-

"While I don't have the report right now, I have some idea of what it contains. It will look both at the fishery and the ecology of the area.

New York City officials had appealed for a harsher penalty after hundreds of girls from other states were attracted to

Bread Boost Just the Start

A recent one-cent price increase on a loaf of bread is just the forerunner of future increases, a spokesman for a major Victoria bakery said today.

Bread was increased to 27 cents for a 16-ounce loaf by Weston Bakeries Ltd., McGavin Toastmaster Ltd. and the Victoria-based McDonald's Bakery Ltd. A 24-ounce loaf of white sliced bread is now 38 cents.

T. E. Moir, general manager of Weston's, said, "the immediate one-cent increase isn't going to cover increased costs."

The increase was blamed on labor costs which went up when the Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union won wage increases recently. Three more contracts now are in abeyance, said Moir, and if substantial increases are won in those negotiations, "the price will have to go up again." Bakery owners have yet to deal with contracts for bakery salesmen, truck maintenance men and plant engineers, all of whom have different unions. S. G. Fueco, McGavin's manager, said in Vancouver that prices were also following increased packaging costs and the upward cost-of-living trend. McDonald's manager, John McDonald, said that while his bakers are not in the baker's union, they have had

"As one bakery puts up its prices, we all have to."
A spokesman for the baker's union, financial secretary Mel Kemmis, said McDonald's had no reason for increasing their price because its bakers are not organized.

Some small bakeries still sell at lower prices. However, spokesman for Arnold's Bakeries Ltd., where the price is 25 cents a loaf, said small bakeries will "probably follow with increases shortly.

The last increase in bread prices was in 1967,

CHRYSANTHEMUM SHOW REJECT

Stupid Little Plant' Let Grower Down

If you see a big strong man standing in his garden gently pulling petals off a giant-size chrysanthemum, he is probably not playing she-loves-me-

He is more than likely a member of the Chrysanthe-mum Society of Victoria, whose annual show opens omorrow at Centennial United Church.

Flowers at the show are the aristocrats of the chrysanthemum world - and in Victoria that's saying a lot because Victoria, according to society president Mrs. A. R. McMinn, "the most ideal location in all of Canada for growing chrysanthemums."

The petal pulling is called dressing the bloom, which is permitted in the search for perfection. It is one of the many time-consuming rites performed as blooms are picked and kept fresh to be at their best for the judging Friday morning.

"Chrysanthemums are real challenge to grow," Mrs. McMinn said, as she cast a eye over vice-president Bob Begg's magnificent display. "But they do respond to a lot of fertilizer, water, and tender loving care."

Right now, though, the tender loving care is inter-spersed with harsh words, as growers are heard talking to voice in anger: "You stupid little plant, you let me down!" The plant, it seems, had lost its color and was looking decidedly peaked.

Other point-losing faux-pas perpetrated by the plants include opening their top petals - a perfect in-curve should be up-swept from base to top - and failing to reach required size.

Drooping petals are another source of embarrassment to growers, although the reflexed variety are permitted a certain shagginess. They're the ones that look like Beatle hair cuts.

"The trouble is, "Mrs. McMinn lamented, "you get so critical you concentrate on one out-of-place petal rather than the whole beautiful The show, which also includes dahlias, is open to anyone who has managed to grow three blooms as near to perfection as possible. Five blooms to a vase are needed for the championship class. The show is open to the public from 2 p.m. Friday, and on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., when the flowers are auctioned. Tea will be served during the show by the women of the Centennial United Church.

"Then we start getting ready for next year," Mrs. McMinn said, "We can hardly wait to get the catalogues to order plants.

so much. Mrs. Schleicher's paintings are more varied in subject and background than Emily's. She has travelled widely, spending years in Europe, and describes herself as "a cos mopolitan at heart."

She has painted in California, Connecticut and Ontario (where she spent several years as a translator for the federal government.)

Sketches for one of the European paintings in the exhibit were done in a Spanish cafe, "where all I could see were gesturing hands coming out of the sombre back-ground."

The exhibit contains little of her autobiographical work except for the reminiscences of the years with Emily Carr. One portrait of the older artist shows Emily, a friend and "the creatures" at the caravan known as the White Elephant in which Emily lived at Metchosin.

Also on exhibit are award winning paintings done by Mrs. Schleicher since she was a student in San Francisco and Paris, including a Paris work submitted to a Seattle show at Emily's suggestion.

This coming shortly after Emily's invitation to go on a sketching trip with her, was encouraging for the young artist, who writes in her book, 'It meant that she had accepted me as a 'worker' and not just a 'painter.'

Mid-East Meet Seeks Arab Aid

CAIRO (WP) - Egypt, Jordan, Iraq, Sudan and Syria issued a call for more support from other Arab countries at the end of their summit talks Wednesday night.

In a communique that only alluded to what else transpired during the three days of intensive meetings, the five Arab states agreed "the mobilization of the efforts of all Arab countries for battle constitutes a means by which Arab forces can consolidate their confrontation with the enemy.'

Foreign analysts here said Wednesday they expected the final communique to contain few specific resolutions, suggesting the five countries reached agreements not being made public.

The conference took place, the communique said, as a "reply to the challenge being faced by the Arab nation which has reached its peak in the crime of burning the blessed Al Agsa Mosque which occupies an exalted place in the hearts of all Arabs and Moslems."

On the last day of the talks. Egypt, Syria, Traq and Jordan were joined by a high ranking Sudanese delegation headed by Gen. Caafar Numeiry, chairman of Sudan's Revolutionary Command Council. The Sudan, which has a small troop contingent in the Suez Canal Zone, was a signatory of the

Political Jockeying Marks Chilean Scene

SANTIAGO (Reuters) -Chile's many political parties already are jockeying to fill the country's top post, even though election day is a year

Several names have been mentioned as prospects for fu-ture residency in the presidential palace, but by election day there should be just three candidates—a leftist and a rightist challenging the candidate of the governing Christian Democrat party.

Because the campaign has only begun, none of the main parties has formally presented its man.

President Eduardo Frei, who brought the first Christian Democrat government to Latin America in 1964, is not allowed to run again for office and technically cannot even eampaign for his party.

Some Chileans believe the ersonally popular Frei could win re-election if allowed to run again, but the last five years of his government have disillusioned many original supporters of the Christian supporters of the Christian Democrat party.

OPINION POLARIZED

His often-frustrated efforts to bring about a non-Commu-nist revolution have resulted in a polarization of political opinions in the country.

The right wing, which withits own candidate and backed Frei when a Communist victory seemed likely in 1964, woke up to find a president who was not looking after its interests.

While Frei's agrarian reforms seemed arbitrary and unjust to the right wing, the left thought them inadequate and too slow.

Whenever he took the middie road, he was attacked from both sides. He increased government spending on so-cial welfare but high inflation rates followed.

Several months ago, his own Christian Democrat party was splintered to the left because of a row over the pace of the agrarian reform. New revolutionary groups-notably the Revolutionary Movement of the Left-also sprang up out-side the traditional Communist and Socialist parties.

BIGHT SURGES

At the other extreme-and perhaps the most notable phe-nomenon of the last two years the right wing has won new

In the March congressional elections, feeding off dissatisfaction with mounting inflation and several scandals involving members of the government, the right-wing National party took a surprising 20 per cent of the vote and the Christian Democrat vote tumbled to 30 per cent.

Even among students, the right wing won new backing.

The entire right-wing surge now is focused on 72-year-old Jorge Alessandri, the man succeeded in the presidency. Playing the part his supporters expect from him, Alessandri has remained aloof from the campaign, is rarely seen in public and has

On the important issue of nationalization of vital copper mines and installations, Tomic recently spoke against Frei's policy of moving gradually, putting him in harmony with the entire left.

Frei reached a compromise agreement with the U.S. Anaconda Copper Co. that its property would be gradually nationalized, with the entire operation in Chilean hands by 1982. But Tomic felt a golden opportunity had been missed to take over Anaconda and the entire copper industry im-

Car Wrecks Garbage Pickup

Garbage was strewn all over the street Tuesday morning when a small car, driven by a 16-year-old boy, ran into and wrecked one of Oak Bay's threewheel garbage pickups.

The collision occurred in the 900 block of Foul Bay, north of Richardson. The pickup driver, Mike Dynowski, 3965 Rainbow, was treated for head injuries at Royal Jubilee Hospital and later released.

The car's driver was also treated at Jubilee for a gash over one eye.

The car was valued at $350 and the cost of replacing the pickup is estimated at $4,000.

POPE, BISHOPS REBUKE REBEL PARISHIONERS

ROME (AP) — Pope Paul and the Italian Bishops Conference Wednesday rebuked rebel priests and laymen for Florence's Isolotto parish, scene of the biggest crisis of church authority in Roman Catholic Italy.

The pontiff condemned repudiation of the authority of bishops by small groups of reformers as leading to "a scandal, a ruination."

The bishops called on the rebels to adhere to the "firm discipline" of their traditionalist archbishop, Ermenigildo Cardinal Florit.

The criticism was expected to harden the position of the rebel parish, which has been challenging Cardinal Florit for a year.

Barge Salvage Attempt Could Spread Oil Slick

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP)-Attempts to raise a sunken oil barge in the Strait of Juan De Fuca could split the barge in half, a diver reported to the Washington State Pollution Control Commission Wednesday.

John Lindbergh said he spent two days diving to investigate the Foss Launch and Tug Co. barge which sank last month in 228 feet of water.

The barge carried 14,000 barrels of diesel oil. Lindbergh said he in-spected 12 tanks and found three with leaks and nine intact. An oil slick surrounds the barge, but no beach pollution has been reported.

the United States-Canadian bor der has termed it a "steaming kettle" of problems caused by disunity and continuing disagreements over Indian rights.

Discontent was translated into action last December when Mohawks blocked the international bridge between Massena, N.Y. and Cornwall, Ont. to protest against having to pay customs

The protest, after which a rifle shot pierced a window and two walls of a customs house, resulted in the arrest of nearly 50 Indians for obstructing traffic on the bridge, Charges against most were dismissed.

Part of the St. Regis reserve is in the United States, part in Canada, and the remainder on two Canadian-controlled islands. The large of the two, Cornwall Island, is connected to the United States and Canada by bridges. No tolls are charged on the American bridge, and Indians returning to the U.S. with goods purchased in Canada are not required to pay duties.

Non-Indians are charged tolls for use of the Canadian bridge and Indians carrying merchandise purchased in the U.S. to Canada must pay duties. Canadian collection of the duties durthe last few years caused Indian dissatisfaction to mount, an Indian representative said.

Mohawks living on the island are not required to pay Canadian bridge tolls when driving their own cars. But when goods are delivered to them or when they ride commercial vehicles

OTTAWA (CP) - Parliament Will wasn't the tourist attraction this summer it was last year according to figures kept by the Commons protective staff.

L. G. Syms, deputy chie the staff, said Wednesday total tourist figures for the peak months of July and August dropped 46,160 below the esti-mated 350,000 for the same months in 1968.

From April 1 to Sept. 2, 579,-247 visitors took guided tours through the Parliament buildings, compared to 625,407 for the same period last year.

August recorded the highest single month total, a whopping 151,000, while the biggest single day was recorded on the Vic toria Day weekend on May 18 when 10,235 tourists visited Par-

Chief Syms said the protective staff was surprised at the drop in totals for this summer "as early indications made it look like we were going to have a record year.

"Maybe they just didn't have the money this year," he said with a chuckle. Tours of the Parliament buildings are free.

The nearest star to earth, other than the sun, is 25.5 trillion miles away. Can man, presumably a prisoner of the solar system, ever bridge so great a distance in order to find out what kind of matter exists out there? He may no

GRAND TOUR

A while back a panel of the Space Science Board of the National Academy of Sciences proposed that the United States begin work at once on "grand tour" flights by unmanned craft to the outer planets of the sun's family.

These are Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto, ranging from 483.3 million to 3.67 billion miles in average distance from the sun. The grand tour flights would begin in 1974, take years to com-plete, and would never carry a spacecraft beyond the fringes of the solar system. Nevertheless, one of them, the voyage to Pluto, might put a human contraption in sensing distance of matter which is more representative of inter-stellar than solar stuff.

According to the space board panel, it has been suggested that Pluto, now the outermost planet, "may not be an original member of the solar system" but a stray from more distant and more mysterious regions of space.

Some of the so-called minor planets, or asteroids, and particularly the comets which a spacecraft might encounter in a tour of the outer solar system, may also consist of material from beyond the border, the panel said.

And perhaps a few of the remoter satellites of the major planets, the scientists said, "may be captured bodies from either within or without the solar system."

But the comets appear to offer man his best chance of sampling matter foreign to his own neighborhood. Just as meteorites are visitors from solar space to earth, many comets may be visitors from galactic space to the solar system.

TINY CORES

Comets, among the most the sun's grasp, are huge but light. They trail tails as much as 200 million miles long. But their cores are tiny, a mile or so in diameter, and their mass is probably less than 1-10,000 that of earth's.

The problem is that there are humans roaming the woods in the guise of hunters who have never learned when to stop killing.

We see evidence of it along back roads-a deer carcass with the hind quarters cut away or bits of bones left "summer" kill, You see it in the duck marshesducks left at the landing that would not fit into a mn's legal limit. HOME GARDEN

Time for Division of Perennials

The old gardening phrase "to divide is to multiply" could be the gardener's alogan for September. While many are looking and planning for increasing leisure to enjoy their plantings, some delight in continued activity and remaking of their garden each year

This is possible, at least every two or ree years, in a garden using a number of ree years, in a garden using a number of the herbaceous perennials, for this type of plant divides readily to multiply.

Inevitably favorites are developed over years and these are the ones to multiply, for we soon discover that groups of the one kind of plant catch the eyes of visitors whereas a single treasure is likely to be invisible except to our own.

Perennials have mainly fine fibrous roots, so their division consists in pulling apart the clumps into smaller pieces. Since we don't like to wash all particles of soil from fine roots, for easier handling we resort to the old method of using two garden forks thrust deeply into the clump back to

By forcing apart the handles in a levering action, the clump divides in natural sections, each with its complement of roots intact.

With this much done, it is easy to see if any worn-out woody pieces are in the divisions. Remove these and discard, retaining only the lively new shoots and dormant growth buds which may be visible.

Herbaceous perennials responding well to this kind of treatment are columbines (aquilegia), phloxes, lychnis, the Shasta-daisies (but beware of their strong ofor being too near a sitting out area), thalietrums and polemoniums (Jacob's-ladder); you will have others, and knowing their roots will help you in propagation.

When the plants are first lifted for dividing, cut off the tall stems, allowing as many leaves as possible to remain a the base of the clump.

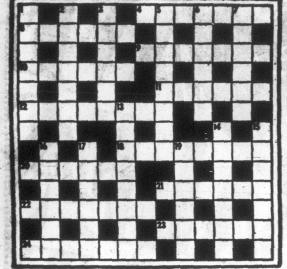

After division, set the pieces closely together in a flat or box if you are delayed in their replanting. Pour water over them gently and keep on the north side of a shrub, wall or

Get them back into the soil soon, in groups of threes or fives, a foot apart at least to give you the satisfaction of hearing your friends say "What a showing!"

Gati has also been appointed conductor of the senior division orchestra of Vancouver's Junior Symphony Society.

Gati was first signed with the Victoria Symphony in 1967, succeeding Otto-Werner Mueller.

The Victoria Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Thomas Mancini conductor of Palm Springs' Desert Symphony, at a free concert in Beacon Hill Park at 2:30 p.m. Sunday.

Mancini is a cousin of wellknown composer and conductor Henry Mancini, famous for his "Pink Panther" theme.

Richard is 19 and loves poetry. He writes it the hard way. From birth, cerebral palsy has forced him into a running battle for control of limbs and voice.

Since 1953, when the local cerebral palsy clinic opened, Richard has had trained allies in his fight. Now one of the many patients at the G. R. Pearkes Clinic for Handicapped en, he's able to write his poetry on a type stick attached to a band he wears around his head. He now is in Grade 9 and intends "to go on learning."

Richard wrote this:

In April leaves sprout from the bark, Coming into light from the dark, Making a roof over a park. They are green.

October comes and leaves are dry, The cold wind helps them sweep the sky Gradually fall, gradually die.

It's December, leaves are nowhere, The ground is white and trees are bare, People are snuggled in their lair.

The poem was read Wednesday by Mrs. H. B. McClung of the clinic and to representatives of the 23 other agencies in the Community Chest of Greater Victoria at a pre-eampaign luncheon in the Imperial Inn.

Chest Chairman Peter Darling said this year's target is set at $694,000

Bread Boost Just the Start

A recent one-cent price increase on a loaf of bread is just the forerunner of future increases, a spokesman for a major Victoria bakery said today.

Bread was increased to 27 cents for a 16-ounce loaf by Weston Bakeries Ltd., McGavin Toastmaster Ltd. and the Victoria-based McDonald's Bakery Ltd. A 24-ounce loaf of white sliced bread is now 38 cents.

T. E. Moir, general manager of Weston's, said, "the immediate one-cent increase isn't going to cover increased costs,' The increase was blamed on labor costs which went up when the Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union won wage increases recently.

Three more contracts now are in abeyance, said Moir, and if substantial increases are won in those negotiations, "the price will have to go up again."

Bakery owners have yet to deal with contracts for bakery salesmen, truck maintenance men and plant engineers, all of whom have different unions.

S. G. Fuoco, McGavin's manager, said in Vancouver that prices were also following increased packaging costs and the upward cost-of-living trend.

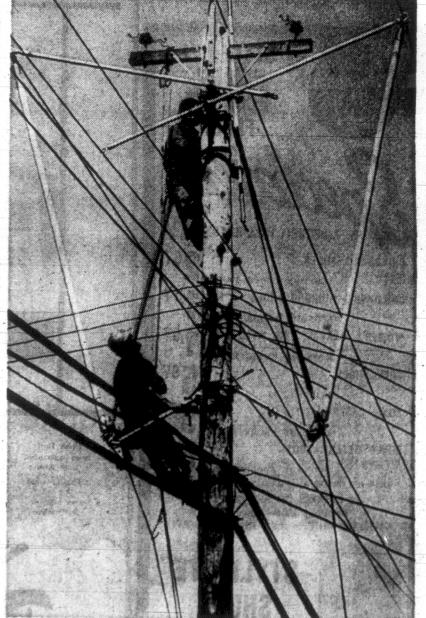

McDonald's manager, John McDonald, said that while his bakers are not in the baker's union, they have had wage increases. 'As one bakery puts up its prices, we all have to."

A spokesman for the baker's union, financial secretary Mel Kemmis, said McDonald's had no reason for increasing their price because its bakers are not organized.

Some small bakeries still sell at lower prices. However, a spokesman for Arnold's Bakeries Ltd., where the price is 25 cents a loaf, said small bakeries will "probably follow with increases shortly."

The last price increase in bread prices was in 1967.

Student Housing Squeeze Tightens

Every year more students come to the University of Victoria, and every year it becomes harder for them to find places to stay and study. This year, while workmen put the finishing touches on the university's new Lansdowne College, some 80 male and female students will bed down in temporary dormitory quarters on campus.

Four of the college's six units-to house a total of 144 men and 141 women-will be ready for occupancy when registration for the 1969-70 session begings next week.

The other two units are scheduled for completion during the latter part of October.

Prostitutes from out of state flocked to New York's two largest cities, local girls in other cities operated more brazenly than before and young girls were attracted to the trade.

This week, a new law went into effect raising the maximum penalty for prostitution to 90 from 15 days, and wiping out the liberalization attempt that had seen the penalty reduced on Sept. 1, 1967, of a year to the 15 days.

New York City officials had appealed for a harsher penalty after hundreds of girls from other states were attracted to the city by the liberalized law. The city recorded a 70-percent rise in prostitution arrests from 1966 to 1968. Police said 4,738 prostitutes were arrested in 1966, while the stiff one-year penalty was in effect, and 8.045 1968, the first full year of the 15-day law.

Police in Buffalo said they had faced a similar problem of girls drawn to the state's second-largest city because of the
